Waterville - An Coireán

Evening

Welcome

The village of Waterville takes its name in English from Waterville House, the eighteenth-century house built by the Butler family on the narrow stretch of river that joins Loch Currane with the sea, the name therefore meaning the house of the three different waters.

The name of the village in Irish is An Coireán, from the pool near Waterville House which is famous for its salmon and trout (coire: a cauldron).

Coincidentally, An Corcán, the name of this restaurant has a similar meaning: a round cooking pot.

Although the village is a relatively new one, having grown up in the nineteenth century around fishing hotels and later the Waterville Transatlantic Cable Station, the area has a very ancient mythological and archaeological history, and is where tradition tells us the Milesians, the ancestral founders of the Gaelic nation, first made successful landfall in Ireland, having made the voyage from Galicia in northern Spain.

The restaurant is owned and run by Fiona and Dan Fitzpatrick, both from Waterville. It is the dedication of Fiona and Dan and the commitment of their team of staff, who make this restaurant so successful since 1996.
